Aprio helps you address the three core aspects of customs and tariff compliance

Our services are a good fit for businesses in automotive, renewable energy, steel, aluminum and manufacturers who need assistance importing and exporting tangible products to and from the United States. Aprio's team of talented customs and tariffs professionals can help you navigate the three core elements of customs and tariffs rules:

Tariff Classification (Duty Rate):

Are your products properly classified?

There are thousands of rules and tariff classifications, and it's vital that you properly classify your products with the appropriate 10-digit codes.

Customs Valuation (Ad Valorem):

Are your products properly classified?

It's important to follow customs rules to ensure you are properly appraising your products and factoring in the potential of transfer pricing when importing from related parties.

Country of Origin (Special Tariffs):

Are you importing from a country with additional duty fees?

Depending on the country of origin of where your product is sourced, you may face additional duty charges, or the product can enter duty free.

"We guide you through US international trade laws and regulations, performing health checks to ensure compliance and identifying opportunities to mitigate penalties and save on duties."
